

Do you need a background check to get a job in Utah?

According to recent studies, approximately 95% of U.S. employers - roughly nine in 10 companies - conduct background checks against job applicants. If you're applying for work in Utah, but you have a record of arrests or criminal convictions, you may be worried about what a background check will turn up and how it could affect your job search.

How do I get a background check in Utah?

You can get a background check in Utah through the Utah Bureau of Criminal Identification (BCI) for official state checks. The BCI provides various background check services for different needs, including criminal history and FBI background checks.

What does a criminal background check show in Utah?

Criminal background checks show any criminal history, including arrests, charges, and convictions. This is essential for safety and compliance with Utah law. Employers and landlords use this information to assess the risk of hiring or renting to someone. These checks can include misdemeanors, felonies, and pending criminal cases.

What is the Utah Criminal Investigations & Technical Services Act?

The Utah Criminal Investigations and Technical Services Act governs how criminal background checks are conducted in Utah. It includes regulations on fingerprint-based checks, especially for employment and volunteer positions. The act ensures that background checks are thorough and accurate. This provides reliable information for decision-making.

How much does a Utah State background check cost?

The cost of a Utah state background check varies. Generally, a basic criminal background check from the Utah Bureau of Criminal Identification costs around $15. More comprehensive checks, like employment background checks, might cost more. This is due to extra services such as employment and education verification.

Does the FCRA apply to background checks in Utah?

The FCRA is a federal law that also applies to background checks in Utah. It sets guidelines on how employers can use credit and background reports. Employers must get the candidate's consent. They also need to provide the candidate with a copy of the report if any adverse action is taken based on its contents.
