What are the components of the Manzanita Micro System?

Components of the Manzanita Micro System are connected in a buss formed with standard telephone cable. The Manzanita components are: The regulator board mark 3x4SMT: The regulator board has voltage taps for each cell of the "battery". Temperature sensors are also available.

What is Manzanita Micro?

Manzanita Micro is closely managed by Rich Rudman, an early innovator in Electric Vehicle performance components. His interest is in extracting as many watts as possible from a smaller pack. To meet this need, his system provides a high level of adjustability and monitoring. From a boaters perspective, however, it is needlessly complex.

How many amps does a manzanita system take?

With our system we rarely charge at more than 200 amps and this pack will absorb 800Amps/hour. The board has a telephone jack that allows it to connect to other components of the Manzanita system. The regulator is programmed through the display. The interface is pretty clunky but once you've done it, you will never be back.
