How much will North Carolina spend on electric vehicle charging stations?

In February the U.S. Department of Transportation said it would spend $5 billion over five years to build electric vehicle charging stations along interstate highways. North Carolina's portion of that is $16,137,196.

Will North Carolina ban EV charging stations?

But the bill doesn't simply disallow EV charging stations in North Carolina. Instead, it requires both public and private locations where EV charging is offered to provide "gasoline or diesel fuel for motor vehicles through a pump to the public at no charge," so other drivers can make use of those stations as well.

Will North Carolina eliminate free charging for electric cars at businesses?

A new bill has been introduced in North Carolina to try to eliminate free charging for electric cars at businesses, and their logic to justify it is unsurprisingly poor. For the most part, electric vehicle charging happens at home or at fast-charging stations on long-distance travel.

Will North Carolina build electric charging infrastructure in the next 7 years?

North Carolina expects to build out the electric charging infrastructure over the next seven years. The online map identifies the 11 locations along the alternative fuel corridor that will comprise Phase 1 of the project.

Is North Carolina's Electric Car Bill counter to the electric vehicle industry?

In fact, the bill would appear counter to the expanding electric vehicle industry nationally and in North Carolina. The U.S. plans to have 50% of new passenger cars and light trucks sold by 2030 to be electric. Gov. Roy Cooper also has signed an order calling for at least 1.25 million registered zero-emission vehicles in the state by 2030.

What is the New Jersey electric vehicle charging station law?
